All BC Hatching Egg Producers and Stakeholders,

RE: HATCHERY LICENSE CRITERIA CHANGES EFFECTIVE DECEMBER 31, 2021 – REQUEST FOR EXTENTION FOR FEEDBACK

On May 3, 2021, the BC Broiler Hatching Egg Commission (the Commission) issued a notice that it had been reviewing the general hatchery requirements outlined in the Consolidated Order. Considerations in this review include establishing provisions in support of maximizing 80/20 as part of the Commission's 2021 Strategic Plan.

The Commission noted in that letter that recent issues have also arisen concerning mainstream and specialty producer-hatcheries and outlined those issues. The May 3, 2021 letter is attached for stakeholder review.

Since that time, stakeholders have requested extensions for time to respond and for face-to-face meetings. The initial feedback deadline was June 10, 2021. The Commission has decided to extend the feedback timeline to July 31, 2021. Following that deadline, the Commission will offer opportunities to those stakeholders who have provided written submissions to meet with the Commission to review their submissions. The Commission will consider the written submissions and follow-up meeting input at their September meeting.

All stakeholders are now requested to review the proposed amending order attached and provide feedback to the Commission by July 31, 2021. The Commission will carefully consider this and the feedback from the follow up meetings before reaching any decisions concerning the proposed Amending Order. Please note that if the Commission should decide to pass the Amending Order, either in its current form or some revised form, it does not anticipate that such an Order would come into effect sooner than December 31, 2021. This timeline gives all hatcheries time to adjust or raise exceptional circumstances for the Commission to consider before an Amending Order comes into effect.

All BC Hatching Egg Producers and Stakeholders,

RE: PROPOSED HATCHERY LICENSE CRITERIA CHANGES EFFECTIVE DECEMBER 31, 2021

The BC Broiler Hatching Egg Commission has been reviewing the general hatchery requirements outlined in the Consolidated Order. Considerations in this review include establishing provisions in support of maximizing 80/20 (the balance of 80% domestic and 20% import product) as part of the Commission's 2021 Strategic Plan.

More recently other issues have arisen with respect to mainstream and specialty producer-hatcheries. In the case of the former, producer-hatchery license holders have adjusted their existing or proposed business models from through putting their product to working exclusively via the mutually acceptable arrangements with another hatchery. In the latter case, an existing specialty producer has applied to be licensed as a new specialty producer-hatchery.

These circumstances have caused the Commission to examine its policies with respect to hatchery licensing generally and with respect to producer-hatcheries.

It is thought that mainstream hatcheries and mainstream producer-hatcheries licensed by the Commission should be contributing participants under the Official Flock Schedule and have the capacity to do so. Hatchery and producer-hatchery licenses should not be granted primarily as a means of providing the licensee with the ability to order broiler breeders without the capacity to hatch the production from those breeders.

Currently, all producers are obliged to order broiler breeders through their assigned hatchery. A producer-hatchery may also order its own broiler breeders, which is a financial benefit to the producer. This benefit is compounded if a producer-hatchery is delegating the actual hatching of its production to another hatchery via mutually acceptable arrangements. Whether individual producers, hatcheries (from whom breeder chick prices charged to producers include profit margins) or the Commission should be responsible for ordering broiler breeders is a larger question but here, the question is whether a producer should be able to operate a "shell" hatchery and receive financial benefits denied to other producers.

Although not part of the Official Flock Schedule, the capacity requirements for a specialty producer-hatchery are also being considered by the Commission.

All stakeholders are now requested to review the proposed Amending Order, attached, and provide feedback to the Commission by June 10, 2021. That feedback will be carefully considered by the Commission before reaching any decisions with respect to the proposed Amending Order. Please note that if the Commission should decide to pass the Amending Order, either in its current form or some revised form, it does not anticipate that such an Order would come into effect sooner than December 31, 2021. This would give all hatcheries time to adjust or raise exceptional circumstances for the Commission to consider before an Amending Order comes into effect.
